

Visits to Linslade Woods

With the current restrictions in force the Friends of Linslade Woods have had to suspend their normal programme of activities and are currently unable to carry out their usual maintenance work in the Woods including the clearance of litter.

However, with spring on the way and the bluebells starting to flower the Woods are looking more attractive and understandably many people are now taking the opportunity to visit the Woods to enjoy the natural beauty.

Visitors are always welcome to come to the Woods to see and experience the wildlife at any time. Sadly, there have been recent worrying reports about the dropping of litter, and about the lighting of fires and damage caused to benches and trees. The Friends' Group are therefore particularly concerned that all visitors take care not to cause any harm during their visits. This means keeping to the marked paths to protect the bluebells and avoiding the dropping of litter or causing any other damage. In these difficult times the Friends' Group feel that it is very important that we all come together to enjoy the woods and to care for and protect the wildlife. We know that is what most people want and it is therefore also important that the Woods are not damaged in any way that could spoil other people's enjoyment or cause any harm to wildlife.
